Tulips

SINGLE EARLY TULIPS

The first of the tulips to come into bloom growing to a height of twelve to sixteen inches. They blossom from three to four weeks earlier than the long stem varieties. This makes them especially adapted for porch boxes. Their bright colors make wonderful show beds, and because of the fact of their earlier blooming, you can take them up earlier and plant your summer flowers that much sooner.

CULTURE

Any good well drained garden soil is suitable for the growing of tulips and narcissi. If stable manure is used, use it well rotted and spade deep in the ground and be careful in planting that the bulbs do not come in direct contact with the manure. Super-phosphate or bone meal with a little nitrate can be used if stable manure is not available. This also should be spaded deep in the soil. Plant bulbs to a depth so the soil will cover them about four inches over the top of the shoulder of the bulbs. Keep the soil loose to a depth of about three inches and free from weeds. After the tops are about two-thirds dried down lift the bulbs carefully and store narcissi in a well ventilated shed or garage. Tulips should be in a cool place, dark preferred, out of the wind, just dry enough so they will not mould.
